

Give Syrian refugees hope

Syrian refugees are finding it harder to survive after more than five years at war. In Jordan and Lebanon they are living a hand to mouth existence. Some find work in high risk, temporary jobs. Many are going further into debt, skipping meals and missing out on schooling and healthcare.

Paediatrician Dr Saba Ghawi (pictured) donates his time to care for refugee children in Jordan. CWS is funding free medical clinics in refugee camps through our partner the Department of Service to Palestinian Refugees. DSPR distributes food and relief supplies to Syrian refugees in Jordan and Lebanon. In addition they run health care and life skills for women who have taken over family responsibilities, schooling and fun activities for children and train refugees to provide psychosocial support. The United Nations reports 4.8 million refugees are sheltering in neighbouring countries. They need help now.
